2. On pages 28-29 amend the last paragraph on page 28 as follows:

~~[Figure 6 shows an embodiment of]~~ An embodiment of the present invention can contain a display device that could be located in a control room and manned by security or airline personnel. It could also be located in a security control room of a commercial building. The display device can be a standard computer monitor or special display device. A screen[33]displays an outline of the airport or building[34]. If there are multiple floors, individual floor plans can be brought up and changed for viewing. The display[33]shows secure gate areas[35]with aircraft[40] parked at some gates. The floor plan shows gates[36], passageways, and bathrooms[37]as well as all other rooms or spaces. Security check points[39] can be noted as well as building entrances and exits[38]. Passengers or visitors of interest can be displayed[41]and tracked. The icon for a particular person being tracked could carry an identification box with relevant information about that person. In addition, different colors could be used to indicate the degree of interest. Special marks could signal whether that person was in a secure area or not. In short, the display can display any data of interest about a particular person in the building, including who they are and especially where they are.
